Things to consider

Make a difference

Supporting children with disabilities, learning difficulties or emotional or behavioural problems and knowing that you helped them to progress is extremely rewarding.

Stressful aspects

You will be kept very busy with duties including preparation, classes, marking and assessing, analysing coursework, meetings, and ordering materials, which can be stressful.

Meet range of people

You will work with students, educational psychologists, social workers and other teachers and learning support workers.

Behavioural issues

You may have to deal with challenging behaviour.

Long hours/overtime

You may have to work late for meetings and to plan for lessons.
